Healthy Example . . .

Until recently, it's safe to say, a comparatively small proportion of the American people had ever heard of Newburgh, New York, a city of 31,000 on the Hudson River. But Newburgh has been very much in the news of late, and has been the subject of lengthy articles in numbers of national magazines and leading newspapers. For events in Newburgh have focused national attention on the welfare problem — and of associated problems and issues that arise as a welfare state develops and expands.

Last fall Newburgh hired a new and experienced city manager. One of his first acts was to look into the relief expenditure situation. He found the payments came to almost a third of the total municipal budget — $983,000 out of $3,134,000 according to a Time magazine account. This was more than was spent on the police and fire departments. Additionally, such heavy relief spending imperiled certain needed and wanted municipal improvements, and brought with it the prospect of higher taxes.

The upshot was that Newburgh's city council took a long look at the tangled relief picture and came up with a new 13-point code. It is this code that has excited national no less than state and local controversy. It provides, in part, that relief payments shall be limited to a three-month period, except for the aged and the physically handicapped; that the mothers of illegitimate children, who have any more babies out-of-wedlock, shall be denied welfare assistance; that, when possible, relief payments will be made through vouchers instead of cash (the council found that some cash payments were going for liquor and other non-necessities), and that able-bodied men drawing relief payments would have to put in a 40-hour week at city work.

It would seem that this tough policy has met with much more approval than opposition, although, of course, there is plenty of the latter. A number of leading public figures have praised it, at least in principle. On the other hand, Governor Rockefeller or of New York is a dissenter, and so is the State Board of Social Welfare which pays out about a third of municipal relief expenses. A legal problem appears here. Federal law requires that the welfare program be uniform within a state, so the Board fears that Newburgh's intransigence could conceivably lead to the loss of federal payments to the whole state. So, in the view of David Franke, writing in National Review — a view which many hold — "the Newburgh case proves that federal aid brings federal control. It shows that federal aid impinges not only on states rights but on the rights of local governments within the states."

The basic problem has been succinctly described by Time in these words: "The welfare state means new security for the millions who do not share the nation's affluence. But it also means public intervention in private lives, job-shirking relief chiselers who loaf at government expense, and tax burdens that soar higher every year." This is the problem that Newburgh is seeking to solve. The town's council and city manager are not opposed to welfare per se. They are simply opposed to what they consider to be unjustifiable and expensive abuses.

What the end will be is not yet clear. Meanwhile, an editorial in Life — which approved the Newburgh action in general, though not all the provisions of the program — made this significant statement: "Washington is now watching and waiting to see what actually develops. So will the U. S. — for over the years social welfare laws have expanded to a point where a full, frank and fair scrutiny of them is long overdue. If charity begins at home, the neighborhood conscience should assuredly have a voice in administering public welfare funds. The great American tradition of generosity to the unfortunate must continue. But Newburgh provides a healthy example of local government assuming due initiative and responsibility."

building on his lot adjoining the new hotel.
Mrs. Earl Dawson was hostess on Tuesday evening of last week, in honor of Miss Louise Peterson. On arriving, the guests, who numbered thirty, were given dust cloths to them. After they had finished a delicious lunch was served in the dining room, where sweet peas and asters formed the table decoration. Before the guests left for their homes, little Joy Olson and Avis Larson carried a prettily trimmed basket which was filled with gifts, and set it before the bride elect, surprising the young lady with a miscellaneous shower.
At 8:30 Saturday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Olson, the marriage of their daughter, Miss Louise Marie Peterson to Mr. Earl Franklin Woodburn was solemnized by Rev. Aaron Mitchell. Mrs. Louis McConnell and Harry Conrath were the only attendants.

Excess Of Bachelors In Crawford Co.

(Special to the Avalanche)
NEW YORK—Would-be brides sit up and take note! Crawford County has a surplus of eligible bachelors on hand.

Details of the over-supply are contained in a report just released by the U. S. Census Bureau. It is based on the latest marital statistics, gathered in conjunction with last year's population count.

Numerically, not counting widowed or divorced people, there are 1,845 single men and boys locally and only 276 single women and girls, making the county a good place for a manhunt.

That it is such a good place has already been discovered by the fair sex. The figures show that they have been making appropriate use of the romantic opportunities.

The overall picture in Crawford County, taking into account both men and women of marriageable age, reveals that 68.4 percent of the total are now married.

That is a relatively large proportion. Elsewhere in the United States, the Census Bureau shows, the ratio is 67.3 percent.

Yet, there remains a preponderance of bachelors locally. The chief reason for it, according to the report, is that men wait much longer than women before getting married.

As a result, men in the United States are approximately 2 1/2 years older than women when they first marry.

At the present time, the median age is 22.8 years for men and 20.3 years for women. Back in 1900 it was 25.9 for men and 21.9 for women.

The figures have been getting lower and lower in line with changing social and economic conditions that have been making it possible for young people to marry earlier. A principal one is the increased tendency of girls to continue working after marriage, at least for a year or two.

Where a person lives also seems to have an effect on his marital status. One of the striking facts brought out by the census is that a considerably larger proportion of farm men, compared with urban men, stay single. Among farm women, however, the reverse is true.

Reported also, for each community, is the number of ex-married residents. The Crawford County figures show, for men: 81 widowed and 90 divorced and, for women, 218 widowed and 38 divorced.
